However, Gramercy soon realizes that the city's allure is not all that it seems, and she finds herself struggling to find her place.

As she navigates the challenges of her new surroundings, Gramercy crosses paths with August, a charming and enigmatic artist. August's presence in Gramercy's life becomes a catalyst for growth and self-discovery. Their connection sparks a flame of love within Gramercy, forcing her to confront her long-held beliefs and insecurities.

Through Gramercy's journey, Rogers explores the complexities of romantic love and its profound impact on one's sense of self. Gramercy's experiences with love and heartbreak become a mirror reflecting her own struggles with identity and acceptance.
