

Lifetime Wandering The World: The Last Aboriginals

Forced Removal and Stolen Generation

The Aboriginals are the indigenous people of Australia. They have a rich and ancient culture that dates back tens of thousands of years. However, their way of life was disrupted by the arrival of European settlers in the 18th century. The settlers took over their land and forced them to live in reserves. In the 20th century, the government implemented a policy of forced removal, known as the Stolen Generation. Under this policy, Aboriginal children were taken from their families and placed in white institutions. This policy had a devastating impact on Aboriginal families and communities.
