Louis Comfort Tiffany: American Visionary

Louis Comfort Tiffany, the American artist and designer, is widely regarded as one of the pioneers of Art Nouveau stained glass. His iconic works, such as the "Peacock Window" at the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York City, showcased his mastery of color, texture, and light. Tiffany's stained glass creations were characterized by their vibrant hues, intricate patterns, and innovative use of opalescent glass, which created a mesmerizing play of light and shadow.

Emile Gallé: French Master

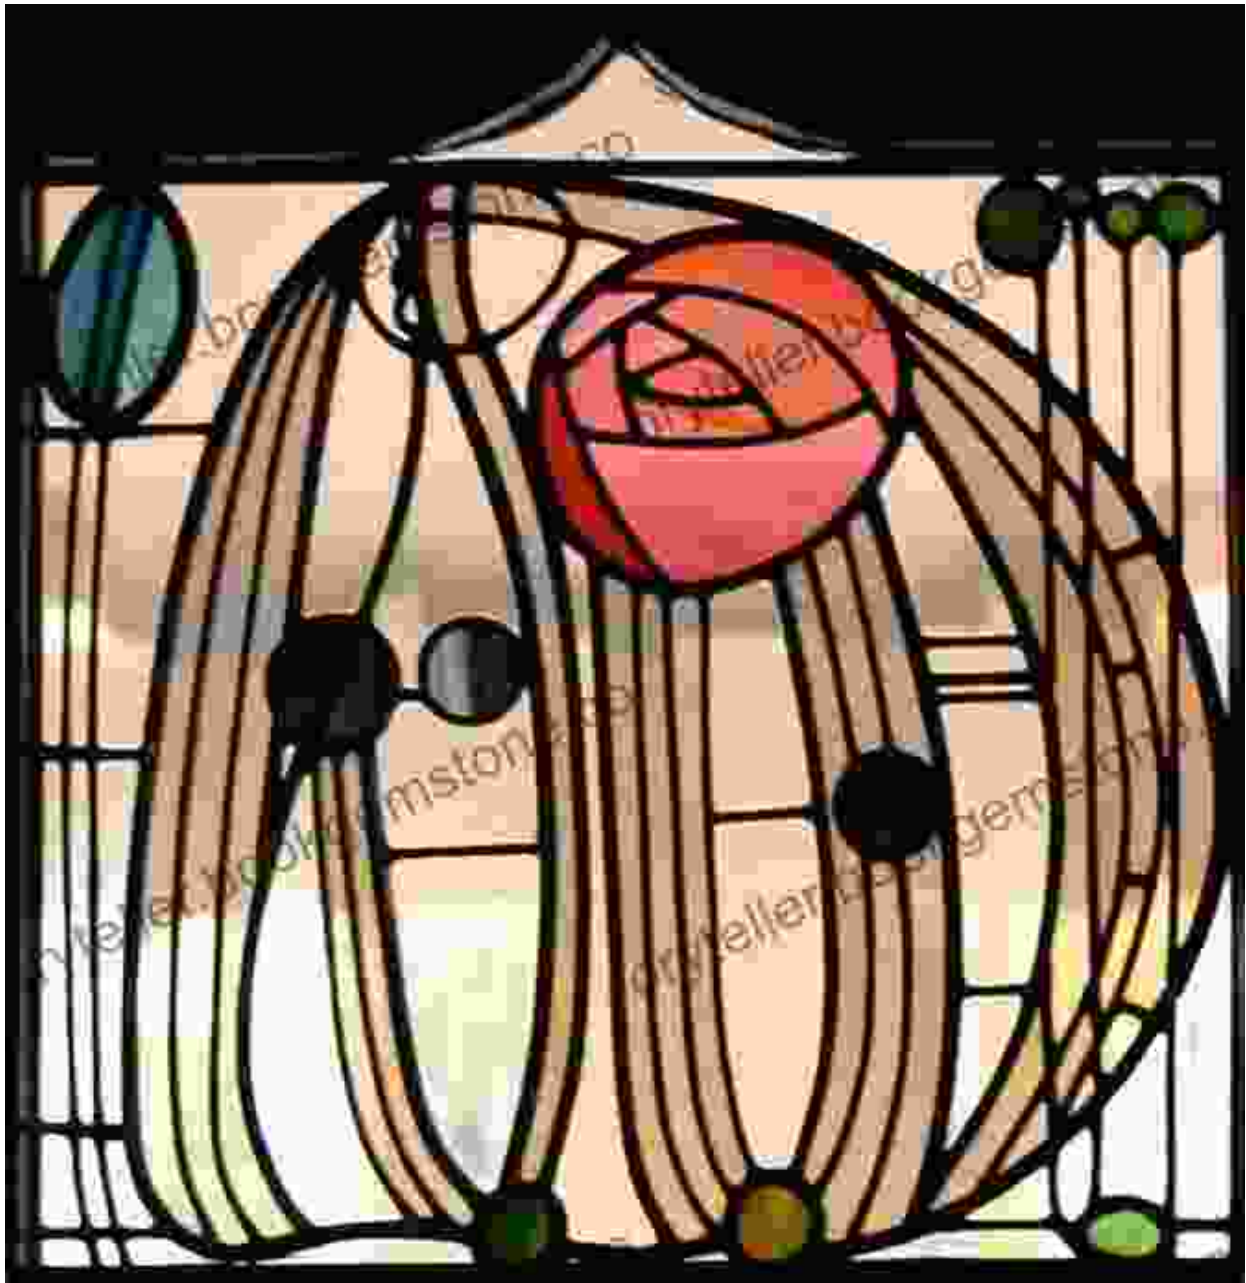

Emile Gallé, a French artist known for his exceptional glasswork, played a pivotal role in the development of Art Nouveau stained glass. His works were inspired by nature, often depicting scenes of forests, flowers, and insects. Gallé's stained glass creations were characterized by their naturalistic forms, subtle colors, and intricate craftsmanship. He experimented with various techniques, including acid etching and cameo glass, to achieve his distinctive style.

John La Farge: American Luminary

John La Farge, an American artist and writer, was another influential figure in the Art Nouveau stained glass movement. His works were characterized by their rich symbolism, often drawing inspiration from religious and literary themes. La Farge's stained glass creations were known for their deep, jewel-like colors and meticulous attention to detail. He played a significant role in the revival of stained glass as a fine art form in the United States.

Charles Rennie Mackintosh: Scottish Pioneer

Charles Rennie Mackintosh, a Scottish architect and designer, was known for his distinctive interpretation of Art Nouveau. His stained glass works were characterized by their geometric forms, stylized floral motifs, and muted colors. Mackintosh's stained glass creations were often incorporated into his architectural designs, creating a cohesive and harmonious aesthetic.

Alphonse Mucha: Czech Symbolist

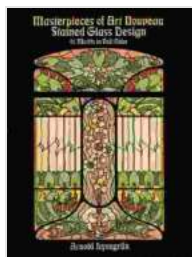

Alphonse Mucha, a Czech artist known for his iconic Art Nouveau posters, also created a number of stained glass works. His stained glass creations were characterized by their flowing, sinuous lines, vibrant colors, and dreamlike imagery. Mucha's stained glass works often depicted female figures surrounded by flowers and other Art Nouveau motifs, creating a sense of beauty and mystery.
